Romania

Yes. I was involved in selecting the students for the group target.

I was part of the first two stages of the project, the first being the writing of the personal statement and the second one the interview.

The first project was a personal statement and the second one an interview. I had the second best grade in school. I'm working now on other two projects. One is called "about us" and is an album about my country , my town and my school. The second is a creativity project where I made a Christmas ornament and an essay about pollution will follow. Also, I planted tulips in a school activity.

Yes, I was involved. At first, I handed in a personal statement, then an interview. Then there have been other extra curricular activities in which I took part :we (the students who are the direct beneficiaries ) planted flower bulbs in the school yard , we participated in the activity “The living Library” during English Class with the topic „If we could talk, you would treat us better", where we chose a character from nature and we told its story of how its life was affected by environmental issues. So we could understand how hard life is for other animals or plants and I realized that once you have ruined something pretty , you cannot fix it, you can just stop the activity of destruction which you have done unconsciously

Romania

This project brings about a lot of benefits, but also involves a lot of commitment. The most important benefits are: the active participation for protecting the environment; the opportunity to collaborate with classmates, older students and children from other countries; learning about the negative effects of pollution and ways of combatting them; the possibility of participating in campaigns of informing adults, children; the possibility of perfecting English etc.

I will take part in attractive lessons regarding the domain of ecology, I'll have access to collaborative teaching/ intercultural learning.

In this project the students will develop abilities like: team spirit, communication in English and taking fast decisions. The students will enrich their knowledge, and the information they will learn in this project will be useful all of their lives to ensure a better life standard. The members of this project will realize how important a cleaner environment is for a healthier life.
